Women as Seen on Television

Despite the fact that sixty per cent of Britain's married women have their own careers, fiction and television writers still refer to wives in such terms as "her indoors" or portray them as downtrodden slaves at the kitchen sink, surrounded by hordes of grubby kids. By comparison, television adverts show sparkling clean kitchens with housewives surrounded by 2-3 freshly scrubbed children in a germ-free environment. Neither of these two descriptions portray the reality of working married women in today's society: it is thought that until women themselves hold the top posts in the television industry, these views will remain unchanged.

1. Sixty per cent of Britain's married women have their own careers.
